A MARKETING PLAN FOR A LOCAL CAFE

The Best Room in Town, and No Way to Find It

What makes Cafe Chawk different, why almost nobody knows it exists, and the ninety-day plan I would run to fix both.

Cafe Chawk is an independent, single-outlet cafe in Jaina More, a highway junction town in the Bermo and Chas belt of Bokaro district, Jharkhand. It has the best-looking room of any comparable venue in the town. It has no Google listing, no reviews, no Instagram presence and no way of knowing who its regulars are. This document is about closing that gap.

PREPARED BY	SUBJECT	WHAT THIS IS	DATE
Deepansh Deep HubSpot Digital, Inbound and Content Marketing Certified B.Tech Data Science, 2027	Cafe Chawk, Jaina More Bokaro district, Jharkhand Single outlet, dine-in Owner-operated	Independent marketing study Not commissioned or paid Nothing implemented Written from public observation	August 2026 Version 2 Marketing and growth scope Finance excluded by design

WHAT THIS DOCUMENT IS, AND WHAT IT IS NOT

This is a marketing plan. It covers what the cafe stands for, how people will find it, what it should publish, and why customers will come back. It is written from the outside, by someone who has eaten there several times and then looked the business up online the way any customer would.

It is not a financial analysis. There is no profit modelling in it, no projections, and no rupee forecasts, because I have not seen the books and would be inventing them if I tried. Where money matters I have said whether something is free, cheap or needs a real budget, and left the arithmetic to the owner, who is the only person with the numbers to do it properly.

I have not interviewed the owner. Everything here is either something I observed directly or something publicly visible online, and Section 16 lists what I would want to check before anyone acted on it.

SECTION 01

How I looked at this business

Almost everything in this document is something I could see. That is deliberate, and it is the reason there is very little guesswork in it.

I went as a customer, several times, and paid attention to different things each time. Then I did what a stranger would do: I searched for the place online, looked for photographs, looked for reviews, and tried to work out from a phone screen whether it was worth driving to.

That second exercise is where most of this document came from. The gap between what the cafe is like when you are sitting in it and what the cafe looks like before you have been is the largest single problem the business has.

What I looked at, and in what order

WHAT I DID	WHAT IT TOLD ME
Visited as an ordinary customer	How the room feels, who else is in it, what people do while they are there, and how long they stay
Looked at the competition	What else somebody in this town could choose instead, and what those places are and are not good at
Searched the business online	Whether a stranger can find it, and what they see if they do. This is where the biggest problem is
Looked for photographs and reviews	Whether anyone has a reason to trust the place before they arrive
Watched the road outside	Who passes the door, how fast, and whether the cafe gives them any reason to stop

> THE ONE RULE I APPLIED THROUGHOUT
>
> Every recommendation in this document is something the owner could start doing without hiring anyone, buying software, or waiting for permission. Where a recommendation needs money I have said so plainly and put it late in the plan, after the free work has been done and there is some evidence it is worth continuing.

IN SHORT

- ✓ Written from direct observation as a customer, not from data I do not have
- ✓ The key exercise was searching for the business the way a stranger would
- ✓ The gap between the room and the online presence is the central problem
- ✓ Nothing here needs software, staff or permission to start
- ✓ Anything costing real money sits late in the plan
- ✓ What I could not check is listed openly in Section 16

SECTION 02

What Cafe Chawk already has that nobody else has

Before anything is fixed, it is worth being precise about what is already right, because the whole plan is built on it.

Most marketing advice for a small business starts with what is broken. That is the wrong place to start here, because this business owns two genuine advantages and is doing nothing with either of them.

Advantage one: it is the best-looking room in the town

This is not a small thing and it is not easily copied. A dhaba can undercut anyone on price tomorrow. Matching a well-designed room takes taste, money and months. In a town where the alternatives are functional rather than pleasant, being the nicest place to sit is a real position.

At the moment the room does nothing for the business beyond pleasing the people already inside it. It is not branded, not lit for photographs, not laid out for a group photo, and it produces no pictures that travel. The single most valuable asset in the business is invisible to everyone who has not already walked through the door.

Advantage two: it sits on a road that is getting busier

Jaina More is a junction on the NH-320 corridor, and the road through it is being widened to four lanes. That means the number of people passing the door is structurally increasing, without the business doing anything to earn it.

Traffic passing at speed is a difficult customer to catch, but it is also a customer with almost no acquisition cost attached. They are already outside. What they need is a reason to slow down, somewhere obvious to park, a sign they can read at speed, and confidence there is a clean washroom. None of that is marketing spend. It is signage and housekeeping.

> Cafe Chawk has already done the hard part, which is being worth visiting. What it has not done is any of the easy part, which is being findable and being remembered.

WHAT THE BUSINESS OWNS	WHAT IT IS CURRENTLY WORTH
The best room in town	Almost nothing, because nobody sees it until they are already inside
A widening highway frontage	Almost nothing, because there is no signage, no obvious parking and no reason to stop
A steady flow of walk-in customers	One visit each, because nobody is recorded, contacted or given a reason to return
An owner who knows the regulars by face	Nothing that survives the owner's memory, because none of it is written down

IN SHORT

- ✓ The room is the position, and it is genuinely hard to copy
- ✓ The highway is a free and growing source of new customers
- ✓ Neither asset currently produces anything for the business
- ✓ The room is invisible to anyone who has not already visited
- ✓ The highway needs signage and housekeeping, not advertising
- ✓ Every recommendation that follows is about converting these two into customers

SECTION 03

Six things I found, and what each one costs

Costed in customers rather than in rupees, because customers are what I can actually observe.

#	WHAT I FOUND	WHAT IT COSTS THE BUSINESS	FIXED IN
01	No Google listing at all	Anyone who searches for somewhere to eat in this area does not see the cafe. Not lower down the list. Not at all. Every one of those people goes somewhere else and the owner never knows they existed	Section 07
02	No reviews anywhere	Even someone who finds the place has nothing to reassure them. An empty listing reads as risky, not as new, and the safe choice is the dhaba everyone already knows	Section 08
03	No social presence	Under-25s decide where to go from Instagram. The cafe is absent from the one channel its most likely customers actually use, and the best-looking room in town produces no photographs	Section 09
04	The room is unmarked	There is no feature wall, no sign in the frame, no lighting for photographs and no obvious place to take a group picture. Customers who would happily advertise the place for free are given nothing to point a camera at	Section 09
05	Nobody knows who the regulars are	Every visit starts from zero. There is no list, no numbers, no birthdays, no way to tell a fifth-time customer from a stranger, and therefore no way to bring anybody back on purpose	Section 12
06	Nothing is written down	No count of how many people come in, on which days, at which hours, or how they heard about the place. So nothing that is tried can ever be judged, repeated or dropped	Section 15

What they have in common

Not one of these is a problem with the food, the room or the service. Every one of them sits in the space between the business and the people who have not yet visited it. That is unusual and it is good news, because the expensive things to fix in a restaurant are the kitchen and the room, and neither needs fixing here.

> ONE THING THAT MUST BE TRUE BEFORE ANY OF THIS RUNS
>
> Marketing does not fix an inconsistent product, it advertises one. If the food is not the same on a Tuesday as it was on a Saturday, then bringing more people in and asking them all to leave reviews produces a permanent public record of the inconsistency, and that is far worse than being invisible.
>
> So the first question for the owner is not a marketing question. It is whether the kitchen can produce the same dish the same way every time. If the answer is no, fix that first. Nothing in Section 15 should start until it is a yes.

IN SHORT

- ✓ Six problems, and none of them is the food or the room
- ✓ All six sit between the business and people who have not visited yet
- ✓ Being invisible on Google is the largest and the cheapest to fix
- ✓ No reviews means even the people who find it do not trust it
- ✓ Nobody is recorded, so no customer can be brought back deliberately
- ✓ Food consistency is the gate. Nothing starts before it holds

SECTION 04

Who actually walks in

Four groups, what each one wants, and what would make each one come back. Everything later in this document is aimed at one of these four.

GROUP	WHY THEY COME	WHAT THEY WANT	WHAT BRINGS THEM BACK
Students and under-25s	To sit somewhere that feels good and be seen doing it	A room worth photographing, wifi, being allowed to stay a long time on a small order	Instagram, a photo corner, a place their friends already post from
Young couples and small groups	Privacy, atmosphere, an occasion	Comfortable seating, not being rushed, somewhere that feels a bit special	Being remembered, and something planned for birthdays and anniversaries
Families from the local area	A treat, an outing, somewhere clean	Space, a clean washroom, food the children will eat	Consistency and familiarity. This group is the most loyal once won
Highway travellers	They were passing and needed to stop	Somewhere visible, easy parking, a clean washroom, quick service	Almost nothing. Treat them as one-off margin, not as a relationship

What this tells you about where to spend attention

→ The first two groups are the ones who will market the cafe for free, because they photograph where they go. Everything about the room and the Instagram plan is aimed at them.

→ The third group is the one worth keeping for years. Families are slow to win and slow to leave, and they respond to consistency rather than novelty.

→ The fourth group needs signage and a clean washroom, not marketing. Do not build a loyalty programme for people who live sixty kilometres away.

> A HONEST NOTE ON THESE FOUR
>
> These are drawn from watching who was in the room on the occasions I visited, not from a survey. They are a starting point for a conversation with the owner, who has watched the room every day for years and will correct at least one of them in five minutes. If a fifth group matters more than any of these, his answer beats my observation.

IN SHORT

- ✓ Four groups, and they want genuinely different things
- ✓ Students and couples are the ones who produce free marketing
- ✓ Families are the ones worth keeping for years
- ✓ Highway traffic needs signage, not a relationship
- ✓ The room and the content plan are aimed at the first two
- ✓ These come from observation and the owner will improve them in minutes

SECTION 05

What Cafe Chawk should stand for

A position is a sentence a customer can repeat to a friend. If they cannot repeat it, it is not a position.

> For people in and around Jaina More who want somewhere worth showing up for, Cafe Chawk is the one place in town built to be sat in and photographed. The dhabas feed you. Cafe Chawk is where you go when the visit itself is the point.

What this position deliberately gives up

A position that gives up nothing is not a position, it is a wish. This one concedes three things on purpose.

- The customer who only wants the cheapest food. Cafe Chawk will never beat a dhaba on price and should stop trying. Every attempt costs something and buys a customer who leaves the moment somebody else is cheaper.
- The customer in a hurry, except at a takeaway counter. Lingering is the product. A cafe optimised for turning tables destroys the reason to choose it.
- The everyday, ordinary occasion. The cafe is not competing to be somebody's daily tea. It is competing to be where you go when you want the outing to feel like something.

Why this position and not another

OPTION CONSIDERED	WHY IT WAS REJECTED
Cheapest in town	Unwinnable. A dhaba has a lower cost base and no room to maintain. Competing here means losing slowly and never being able to stop
Best food in town	Impossible to prove from outside the business, and any competitor can hire a better cook. Necessary to be good. Not enough to be a position
Biggest menu	Actively harmful at this size. It slows the kitchen, increases waste and buries the few dishes worth being known for
The nicest place in town (SELECTED)	It is already true, it is expensive and slow for anyone to copy, it generates free photographs, and it supports a price the cheaper positions cannot

IN SHORT

- ✓ A position must be a sentence a customer can repeat
- ✓ Cafe Chawk sells the occasion and the setting, not just the order
- ✓ It gives up the price-led customer on purpose
- ✓ It gives up speed, because lingering is the product
- ✓ Best food is necessary but cannot be a position
- ✓ The room is the only claim that is already true and hard to copy

SECTION 06

What can be copied, and what cannot

Anything a competitor can match in under a month is a tactic. Lead with the things that take them a year.

ASSET	TIME TO COPY	HOW CAFE CHAWK BUILDS IT
A price cut	One day	Which is exactly why it is not a strategy. Anyone can match it by lunchtime and everyone ends up poorer
A drink name or a combo	One to four weeks	Worth having, but never the thing to lead with. Any competitor can copy a name for nothing
A menu change	One month	Useful housekeeping. Not a position
A photographable room	Three to nine months, and real money	The lead asset. Feature wall, a sign in the frame, controlled lighting, seating that works for a group photo
A highway-visible frontage	Cannot be copied	Nobody else has this corner. It needs signage legible at speed, marked parking and a clean signposted washroom
A body of genuine reviews	Nine to twelve months	Built one honest ask at a time. This is why Section 08 starts in week one rather than later
A list of customers you can contact	A year or more	Built one number at a time from the table. Cannot be bought and cannot be taken

What to lead with, and what to keep quiet about

→ Lead with the room and the location. They are true today and slow to copy.

→ Build the reviews and the customer list quietly behind them, because those take the longest and nobody notices you starting.

→ Keep the signature items and the combos, but treat them as reasons to photograph and remember the place rather than as the reason to choose it.

> ON SIGNATURE ITEMS, CORRECTLY FRAMED
>
> A named drink is not a differentiator, because any competitor can copy the name in a week. But signature items still do two real jobs and are worth building for those reasons.
>
> First, they are something to photograph. An item with a distinctive glass, presentation or ritual gets pictured and shared, which is free distribution. Design it for the camera as deliberately as for the taste.
>
> Second, they give people a way to describe the place. 'The place with the ___' is how a customer recommends a cafe to a friend. Without it, the recommendation has no handle to hold on to.

IN SHORT

- ✓ Anything copyable in a month is a tactic, not a position
- ✓ Lead with the room and the highway frontage
- ✓ Build reviews and the customer list quietly behind them
- ✓ A price cut is copied by lunchtime and helps nobody
- ✓ Signature items are for photographs and recall, not differentiation
- ✓ The customer list is the one asset that can never be taken

SECTION 07

Discovery, part one: showing up on the map

The single most important thing in this document, and the one that costs nothing at all.

When somebody in this area decides they want to go out for food, they open Google Maps or they ask a friend. There is no third option that matters. A business without a Google listing is not further down the results. It is not in the results.

This means every person who has already decided to spend money, who is within driving distance, and who does not personally know about Cafe Chawk, currently goes somewhere else. The owner never sees those people and so never notices losing them, which is why this has gone unfixed for years.

What the listing needs to contain

ELEMENT	WHAT IT NEEDS TO BE
Name	Exactly as it appears on the board outside. Never stuffed with extra words like 'best cafe', which breaks Google's rules and can get the listing suspended
Category	Cafe, with secondary categories for coffee shop, restaurant and takeaway as they apply
Description	A short paragraph saying who it is for, what makes the place different, and exactly where it is, in plain language
Photographs	At least twenty five, and this is the part that matters most for a place that looks this good. Exterior, entrance, the room from several angles, tables laid, the signature items, people enjoying themselves with permission. Add a few every week
Menu and prices	Listed properly. People decide whether to come based on this and will not call to ask
Hours	Accurate, including festival days. Wrong hours produce a wasted journey and exactly one furious review
Posts	One a week. Almost nobody locally does this and it shows directly on the listing
Questions	Seed the ten questions people actually ask, and answer them from the business account

The rest of being findable

- → The same name, address and phone number everywhere the business appears. Small differences between listings quietly damage how well it ranks.
- → Claim the listing on JustDial, Sulekha, Apple Maps and Bing Places. All free, all take an afternoon between them.
- → Check the map pin is on the right side of the road. A pin in the wrong place sends people to the wrong lane and earns one bad review.
- → Signage outside that can be read from a moving car, marked parking, and a washroom sign. For a highway junction this is worth more than any advertising.

> WHY THIS IS FIRST
>
> It costs nothing, it takes one afternoon plus about twenty minutes a week afterwards, and every other recommendation in this document depends on it existing. There is no point producing content that sends people looking for a business they cannot find. If only one section of this plan is ever acted on, it should be this one and the next.

IN SHORT

- ✓ Local food decisions happen on Google Maps, or by word of mouth
- ✓ With no listing the cafe is not ranked low, it is absent
- ✓ The loss is invisible, which is why it has gone unfixed
- ✓ Photographs matter most here, because the room is the product
- ✓ One afternoon to build, twenty minutes a week to keep
- ✓ Everything else in this plan depends on this existing first

SECTION 08

Discovery, part two: reviews, and the rule about how you ask

The fastest way to become the obvious choice locally. The obvious method is against the rules, and getting it wrong destroys what you are building.

No comparable place in this town appears to have more than a handful of reviews. A business that reaches thirty or forty genuine ones does not narrowly win the comparison. It becomes the only place on the screen that looks like a real, trusted business.

The method everybody reaches for, and why it backfires

The obvious idea is a card on the table offering a discount or a free item to anyone who leaves a review. It looks efficient, and it is what most local businesses try.

> THE RULE THAT GOVERNS THIS
>
> Google does not allow you to offer anything in exchange for a review. That covers money, discounts, free food, and entries into a prize draw. It applies whether the review turns out to be positive or negative.
>
> If you break it, Google can delete the reviews and can suspend the listing entirely. So the tactic puts at risk the exact thing it is trying to build.
>
> There is also a second rule people miss, and it is the one most likely to catch a well-meaning owner. You cannot ask only the happy customers. Showing the review card to people who enjoyed themselves and quietly skipping the ones who did not is called review gating, and it is banned for the same reasons.
>
> There is a practical problem too. Forty reviews appearing in one week on a listing that had none is exactly the pattern that automatic spam detection is built to catch.

The version that works, and that nobody can take away

WHAT TO DO	HOW IT WORKS
Keep the card, remove the offer	A small card or standee with a QR code straight to the review page. It removes the effort, which is the real barrier. It offers nothing in return
Show it to everybody	The same card, the same words, every customer, regardless of how the visit seemed to go. This is the part that keeps you inside the rules
Ask at the right moment	With the bill, once the plates are cleared and people are relaxed, rather than the instant somebody walks in the door
Ask once, never chase	A single polite request works. A second one turns a happy customer into an annoyed one
Reply to every review inside a day	Including the critical ones, and without arguing. Everyone who reads the listing later sees how the business responds
Aim for a steady flow	A handful every week, sustained, rather than a burst. Slower than the shortcut, and it cannot be deleted

> WHAT YOU MAY DO INSTEAD
>
> You cannot reward the review. You can absolutely reward being part of the place. Featuring a regular on the Instagram page, putting a customer's photograph up with permission, or remembering somebody's usual order all cost nothing, are entirely allowed, and produce reviews anyway, because people write about places where they feel recognised.

IN SHORT

- ✓ No competitor here has a meaningful review base. The category is open
- ✓ Paying for reviews is banned and risks the listing being suspended
- ✓ Asking only happy customers is also banned. Ask everybody
- ✓ Ask with the bill, by hand, once, and never chase
- ✓ Reply to all of them inside a day, including the bad ones
- ✓ Reward being part of the place, never the review itself

SECTION 09

Discovery, part three: Instagram, and a room worth photographing

The cafe's best asset is visual and it currently produces no pictures. This is the cheapest correction available.

Everybody under twenty five decides where to go from Instagram. For a business whose main advantage is how the place looks, being absent from the one channel built for looking at things is the strangest gap in the business.

Fix the profile before producing anything

- → A bio that says what the place is, exactly where it is, and one instruction. Most local pages do none of the three.
- → One way to get in touch, used consistently. A WhatsApp link is more useful than a website, because that is where the message will actually be sent.
- → Highlights answering what people want to know before coming: the menu and prices, the room, timings, where to park, how to book a table for an occasion.
- → The location tag and the town name on every single post. It is one tap and it is free local discovery.

Then build the room into something people photograph

This is the one recommendation in the document that needs a real budget, and it is worth it, because it turns customers into the marketing department.

WHAT TO BUILD	WHY
One feature wall	A single well-designed wall people want to stand in front of. It does not need to be expensive, it needs to be deliberate
The name visible in the frame	A sign or neon piece positioned so the cafe's name appears in photographs taken there. Without this, every picture markets a nice room and not this cafe
Lighting that flatters	The most under-rated item on this list. Bad light means nobody posts the picture, however good the room is
Seating that works for a group	Most photographs are of three to six people. If nowhere in the room accommodates that shot, it does not get taken
A plated presentation worth a picture	Signature items served in a way that looks deliberate. The glass and the plate do work that the recipe cannot

> DO THIS ONE SECOND, NOT FIRST
>
> This is the largest single spend in the plan, so it should follow the free work rather than lead it. Do the Google listing and start the reviews first. If those show that people are searching and arriving, the room investment has evidence behind it. If they show nothing, the cheap discovery work has cost almost nothing and the money is still in the business.

IN SHORT

- ✓ Under-25s choose where to go on Instagram and the cafe is absent
- ✓ Fix the profile before producing a single post
- ✓ Every post carries the location tag. It is free and it is one tap
- ✓ The room needs to be built for a camera, not just for sitting in
- ✓ If the cafe's name is not in the frame, the photograph markets nothing
- ✓ This is the one real spend, and it should come second, not first

SECTION 10

The content plan

What to post, how often, and who makes it. Designed so that it still works in month eleven, which is where most content plans die.

The reason most local businesses stop posting is not that they run out of enthusiasm. It is that every single post requires them to think of an idea from nothing. Fixed categories remove that problem, because the question stops being 'what should I post' and becomes 'which of these four is it today'.

Four categories, and the job each one does

CATEGORY	WHAT IT IS	THE JOB IT DOES
The room	The space at different times of day, corners of it, the light in the evening, tables laid before opening	Sells the main reason to choose this place
The food	Signature items, the way they are served, a new dish, something being made	Gives people something specific to want
The people	Staff, the owner, regulars with permission, the room busy on a Saturday	Makes it feel like somewhere with a life of its own
The occasion	Festivals, birthdays celebrated there, a decorated corner, a group who came for something	Shows what the place is for, not just what it sells

How much, and who produces it

DECISION	THE RECOMMENDATION
How often	Two or three posts a week and a few stories. Enough to stay visible, few enough to survive a busy month. A pace that lasts a year beats a pace that impresses for six weeks and then stops
Who makes it	A local college student on a small monthly retainer. They understand the format better than an agency, cost a fraction as much, and are already in the building
The best content of all	Photographs taken by customers, reposted with permission. More convincing than anything the business can say about itself, and it costs nothing. Ask, credit, repost
What to avoid	Stock photographs, borrowed quotes, and anything that could have been posted by any cafe anywhere. If it does not show this room, these people or this food, it is not worth posting

> The cafe does not need to become a content producer. It needs to make itself worth photographing and then get out of the way while its customers do the work.

IN SHORT

- ✓ Four fixed categories remove the need to invent an idea each time
- ✓ Two or three posts a week, sustained, beats a burst that stops
- ✓ A local student produces better content than an agency, for less
- ✓ Customer photographs, reposted with permission, are the best asset
- ✓ Nothing generic. If it could be any cafe, do not post it
- ✓ The goal is to be photographed, not to become a media company

SECTION 11

The occasion calendar

Festivals and celebrations are not a marketing idea. They are demand that arrives on known dates, and the cafe is currently not ready for any of them.

Every year the same occasions come around, every year people look for somewhere to go, and every year a business without a plan improvises something two days beforehand or misses it entirely. A calendar written in advance turns all of that into preparation.

OCCASION	WHAT PEOPLE ARE LOOKING FOR	WHAT THE CAFE OFFERS
Diwali and Holi	Somewhere to go with family and friends, decorated, feeling like an event	A decorated room, a small festival menu, extended hours
New Year	A place to be at a specific time with a specific group	Bookings taken in advance, a set arrangement, the room dressed
Valentine's Day	Privacy, atmosphere, something that feels planned	Reserved corner tables, arranged in advance, booked by message
Raksha Bandhan, Durga Puja	A family outing after the ritual part of the day	Space for larger groups, and knowing to expect them
Birthdays	Somewhere to bring ten people at short notice	A small party package. This is the one that repeats all year round
Exam results and term ends	Students with a reason to celebrate together	Group seating and a reason to post about it

> THE RULE FOR EVERY ONE OF THESE
>
> Sell the occasion and the setting. Never sell a discount. 'Decorated corner, festival menu, message us to book' protects what the place is worth. 'Thirty percent off this Diwali' tells everybody the normal price was never real, and that impression does not go away afterwards.
> This is also the easiest content in the year to produce, because a decorated room photographs itself and the customers who came for the occasion will post it for you.

Birthdays deserve their own note. They happen every day of the year, they bring a group rather than a couple, they are booked rather than spontaneous, and they are the single easiest thing to build a small package around. Once the customer list in Section 12 exists, a birthday is also the only marketing message a customer is genuinely pleased to receive.

IN SHORT

- ✓ Festivals are known demand on known dates, not a creative idea
- ✓ A calendar written in advance turns improvisation into preparation
- ✓ Sell the occasion and the setting. Never sell a discount
- ✓ Birthdays repeat all year and bring groups rather than pairs
- ✓ Decorated rooms produce their own photographs
- ✓ Customers who come for an occasion post about it without being asked

SECTION 12

Retention: turning a first visit into a habit

The most valuable section in this document. Everything before it brings somebody in once. This is about the difference between one visit and twenty.

Almost all of the growth genuinely available to this cafe is sitting in people who have already walked through the door. They liked it. They meant to go back. They forgot, or nothing reminded them, and eventually they stopped thinking of it at all.

The reason nothing reminded them is that the business has no idea who they are. There is no list, no numbers, no names, no way to tell somebody's fifth visit from their first. Every single customer relationship resets to zero the moment they leave, and the owner's memory is the only record that exists.

> A business that cannot recognise a returning customer cannot deliberately create one. Everything else in this section depends on fixing that first.

Step one: start knowing who your customers are

This needs no software and no money. A QR code on the table leading to a short form, and a spreadsheet behind it.

WHAT TO COLLECT	WHY THAT AND NOTHING MORE
Name	So they can be addressed as a person rather than a number
Phone number	The only contact detail that matters, because WhatsApp is where the message will be read
Birthday	The one date that gives you a genuine, welcome reason to get in touch
Nothing else	Every extra field loses people. Four seconds of effort is the ceiling for a form filled in at a table

Step two: give people a reason to come back a fourth time

- → A simple visit card. Four visits and the fifth includes something free. Free to join, because the contact detail is worth more than any joining fee.
- → The reward is always an item, never money off the bill. Section 13 explains why this matters more than it looks.
- → A message when the reward is ready to claim. An unclaimed reward is a far better reason to return than an unearned offer, and people genuinely want that message.
- → A birthday message with something small attached. This is the only marketing anyone is pleased to receive, and it brings a group rather than one person.

Step three: use the channel properly

WhatsApp is the only channel the business will own outright and the only one no platform can switch off. It is also the easiest to ruin. A cafe that messages people constantly gets muted, and a muted channel is not a channel. Send when there is something genuinely worth saying: a festival arrangement, a new signature item, a reward ready to claim, a birthday. Never more than a few times a month.

IN SHORT

- ✓ Most available growth is in people who have already visited once
- ✓ The business currently cannot tell a regular from a stranger
- ✓ Name, phone and birthday. Nothing more, or the form fails
- ✓ A four-visit card, with the reward always an item and never money off
- ✓ Birthdays are the only message people are pleased to receive
- ✓ Message rarely, or the channel gets muted and stops existing

SECTION 13

Why this plan never discounts

A short section, and the one I would defend hardest, because the pressure to discount will arrive within the first quiet month.

At some point trade will be slow for a fortnight and somebody will suggest twenty percent off. It is the most natural thing in the world to reach for and it is the single most damaging thing this business could do to its position.

WHAT A DISCOUNT DOES	WHY IT MATTERS HERE
It tells people the real price was never real	Once a customer has paid the lower price, the normal price feels like being overcharged. That impression does not fade
It teaches people to wait	In a price-sensitive market, the next offer becomes the thing to wait for. The cafe trains its own customers out of paying full price
It attracts the wrong customer	Discounts bring the customer who came for the discount. They leave the moment somebody else is cheaper, and they were never going to become a regular
It fights on the one ground you cannot win	A dhaba will always be cheaper. Meeting them anywhere near their price abandons the only position the cafe actually has
It is remembered longer than it works	The trade it wins lasts a fortnight. The impression it leaves lasts years

What to do instead

- Give something, rather than taking money off. A free item feels generous, and it never says anything about what the rest of the menu is worth.
- Reward loyalty, not arrival. A reward earned across four visits is worth having. A discount handed to anyone who walks in is worth nothing to anybody.
- Sell an occasion when trade is slow. A festival arrangement, a booked corner, a small party package. These fill a quiet week without ever touching the price list.
- If something must be given away, give away the thing that makes people come back. A free signature item creates a memory. Fifty rupees off a bill creates nothing.

> THE ONE LINE TO REMEMBER
>
> You can always give more. You can almost never charge more again. A discount is easy to start and extremely hard to stop, and everything else in this document is designed to make the cafe worth its price rather than cheaper than the alternative.

IN SHORT

- ✓ The pressure to discount will arrive in the first quiet month
- ✓ A discount tells customers the real price was never real
- ✓ It trains a price-sensitive market to wait for the next offer
- ✓ It buys customers who leave the moment somebody is cheaper
- ✓ Give an item, sell an occasion, reward loyalty. Never cut the price
- ✓ Easy to start, almost impossible to reverse

SECTION 14

The customer journey, end to end

The same plan again, seen from the customer's side, which is the only view that matters.

STAGE	WHAT THE CUSTOMER DOES	WHAT THEY FIND TODAY	WHAT THEY SHOULD FIND
Never heard of it	Searches for somewhere to eat nearby	Nothing. The cafe does not appear	A complete listing with twenty five photographs, near the top of the local results
Considering it	Checks reviews and pictures before deciding	No reviews, no pictures, no reason to trust it	Thirty or more genuine reviews, all replied to, and photographs of a room that looks better than the alternatives
Driving past	Notices the building at speed	A sign they cannot read in time and nowhere obvious to stop	Signage readable at speed, marked parking, a washroom sign
First visit	Sits, orders, enjoys it, leaves	A good experience that leaves no trace anywhere	The same experience, plus a photograph worth posting, a review card and a visit card
Afterwards	Means to go back, then forgets	Nothing reminds them. The relationship ends here	A reward part-earned, a name on a list, and a reason to return that arrives at the right moment
Regular	Comes often, brings people	Recognised by the owner, and nowhere else	Recognised, remembered on their birthday, featured on the page, and the reason three friends first came

Where the journey breaks today

→ It breaks at the very first step, because most people never reach step two. That is what Sections 07 to 09 are for.

→ It breaks again immediately after the first visit, because nothing carries the relationship forward. That is what Section 12 is for.

→ The middle of the journey, the part inside the building, is the part that already works. It is the only stage in this table that needs nothing.

IN SHORT

- ✓ The journey breaks at the first step and again after the first visit
- ✓ The part inside the building already works and needs nothing
- ✓ Being findable fixes the first break
- ✓ A customer list fixes the second
- ✓ Every stage has one specific thing missing, and all of them are cheap
- ✓ Read this table to the owner. It explains the plan in two minutes

SECTION 15

The ninety-day plan

Ordered so that everything free happens before anything expensive, and nothing is spent before there is some evidence it is worth spending.

Weeks 1 to 4: be findable

ACTION	COST	DONE WHEN
Create and complete the Google listing	Free	Every field filled, 25+ photographs uploaded
Fix the Instagram profile: bio, contact, highlights	Free	It answers menu, room, timings and location without asking
Claim JustDial, Apple Maps, Bing Places	Free	Name, address and phone identical everywhere
Put up readable signage and mark the parking	Low	Legible from a moving car, and somewhere obvious to stop
Print the review card and start asking every customer	Low	Cards on the tables, first reviews appearing
Put the QR sign-up code on every table	Free	First names and numbers in the sheet
Start counting: covers per day, busiest hours	Free	One page a day, filled in at closing

Weeks 5 to 8: be worth choosing

ACTION	COST	DONE WHEN
Four content categories live, two to three posts a week	Low	Four consecutive weeks without a gap
Hire the local student on a small retainer	Low	Posting on a fixed schedule without being chased
Ask customers to tag the cafe, and repost with credit	Free	Customer photographs appearing weekly
Launch the four-visit card, keep the review flow going	Low	Cards in circulation, first rewards claimed, all reviews replied to
Write the occasion calendar for six months ahead	Free	Dates, arrangements and content planned in advance

Weeks 9 to 12: be photographed and remembered

ACTION	COST	DONE WHEN
Build the feature wall, sign and lighting	Needs budget	The cafe's name appears in customer photographs
Launch the birthday message and small party package	Low	First birthday bookings arriving from the list
Set up the WhatsApp channel properly	Free	Used for occasions and rewards only, never for noise
Review the ninety days against what was counted	Free	Listing views, reviews, covers per day, repeat customers

> WHY THIS ORDER
>
> Weeks one to four are free or nearly free, and they are what makes the cafe exist online at all. Everything genuinely expensive sits in weeks nine to twelve, by which point there is evidence about whether people are searching, arriving and returning. If the free work produces nothing, almost nothing has been lost. Spend first and skip it, and the room gets better while nobody finds it.

IN SHORT

- ✓ Free work first, spending last, in every case
- ✓ Weeks 1 to 4 make the business findable, at almost no cost
- ✓ Weeks 5 to 8 give people a reason to choose it and return
- ✓ Weeks 9 to 12 are the one real spend, made with evidence behind it
- ✓ Counting starts in week one, or nothing later can be judged
- ✓ Every action has a completion test, not a vague target

SECTION 16

What I would check first, and where I would start

Written from the outside. These are the things I would want to know before anyone acted, and the five days I would start with.

What I would ask the owner

#	THE QUESTION	WHY IT MATTERS
01	Is the food the same every single time?	This is the gate. If it is not, nothing in this plan should start, because marketing an inconsistent kitchen makes the problem permanent and public
02	Who actually comes in, and when?	My four customer groups come from a handful of visits. He has watched the room for years and will correct them in five minutes
03	How many people come on a normal day, and at what times?	Nobody is counting. Without it there is no way to tell whether any of this worked
04	How do the people who come in say they heard about it?	One question at the table for two weeks would show whether discovery really is the constraint I think it is
05	How busy is the room at its busiest hour?	If the place is already full at seven on a Saturday, bringing more people in at that hour makes the experience worse, not better
06	Does he want to be busier, and can the kitchen handle it?	I assumed yes. It is worth asking. A comfortable business he controls may be exactly the business he wants
07	How much time does he have for this each week?	If it is twenty minutes a day, the plan should be weeks one to four only, and that version still works

Where I would start, in one week

DAY	ACTION	TIME	COST
Mon	Create the Google listing. Fill in every field. Take and upload twenty five photographs of the room that morning	3 hours	Free
Tue	Rewrite the Instagram bio, add the contact link, and build four highlights: menu, room, timings, location	1 hour	Free
Wed	Print review cards and start showing one to every single customer, with the bill	30 min	Low
Thu	Put the QR sign-up code on every table and open the spreadsheet behind it	1 hour	Free
Fri	Start the daily count. Covers, busiest hour, and how people say they heard about the place	10 min a day	Free

ABOUT 6 HOURS	ALMOST NOTHING	NO PERMISSIONS
Across one working week	Only the printing costs anything	No vendors, no software, nobody else needed

The one thing I would say to the owner

He has already done the difficult part. The room is genuinely the best in the town and the food is worth coming back for. What is missing is not effort and it is not money. It is that the business has never been introduced to the people who would like it, and there is currently no way for anyone who does like it to be brought back on purpose.

Both of those are fixed with an afternoon, a spreadsheet and the discipline to keep going after the first three weeks, which is where almost every plan like this quietly stops.
